

A Sister's Betrayal Prelude Sage was fourteen when he, his twelve year old brother and his mother moved into the house across from his grandmother's in Youngstown. His mom had just gotten out of an abusive relationship with her boyfriend of five years. The boy's dad had moved out and in with another woman when Sage was only two years old. His mom still seen his dad off and on when he moved out, but the fights between the two became a lot more than Lorene could tolerate. His mother was a hard working woman who did her best with what she had. Her desire to up and move was solely based on the bullying Sage had been enduring at his school. It's been a month since Sage's family moved into his mother's hometown and within that month's time Sage had become friends with the most beautiful girl in school. Even though he had a slight overbite he was still a nice looking guy and not to mention that was the basis for a lot of his fights he had gotten into. The kids would always find time to make fun of his overbite, but Sage never let that stop him from going after what he wanted and right now he had his eyes set on the only girl in school that would even give him the time of day. So when the Fall Festival started he had finally mustered up enough nerves to ask the most beautiful girl in town out and she said, "Yes." Sage waited at the Festival for over an hour in a half drinking on his drink and eating on a Twix, before he finally decided to leave. He really thought things would be different here, but it wasn't. It was just a different town with different bullies. The weather man had called for a chance of rain, but it wasn't supposed to come in until later on tonight. The wind had picked up and the stars were hiding in the sky. He rounded the corner on the path behind his house when two guys jumped from behind some bushes. He could barely see who it was until they stepped in front of the light pole. Reginald and Andrea circled around Sage taunting him, when Reginald stopped dead in his tracks. He made eye contact with Sage and started to tease him. "Did you really think my girl was going to meet you at the Festival, with your crooked smile?" "Reginald, she's not your girl anymore." Sage could feel the small drops of rain starting to fall while he was talking. "From what she told me, you two been split up, and it's been at least three weeks if not more." Reginald shoved Sage causing him to almost lose his footing, but he quickly recovered and stood straight up with his head raised a little. "Whoa," Andrea said, he stepped back and looked over at Sage. "Reginald, man you've better watch out, I believe he just made a bold move on your ass." Reginald quickly jumped at Sage like he was about to hit him, but Sage didn't even flinch. A matter of fact, he raised his head up a little more and balled up his fist. Andrea leaned to the side and looked at Sage at the same time he nodded his head at him. "I like him. . . He's not afraid of your ass Reginald." "Shut the fuck up Andrea!" Reginald balled up his fist and made contact with Sage's face sending blood flying. "What the heck! Reginald, you've got this ass holes blood on my shirt. Man, my mom's gone kill me!" "Fuck your shirt man!" This asshole needs to learn a lesson or two on how to keep his hands off of what doesn't belong to him! "You know what Reginald, forget you! Besides, I feel little man here can take you, hands down." He hit Sage on the arm and told him. "Take it easy on him, man." Then he looked over at Reginald. "Man, I'm leaving, besides, this storm is about to get real out here and I don't want to be caught up in it." He pulled his hoodie over his head and left them standing out in the rain. Sage was still standing there looking at Reginald, who threw up both his hands and tilted his head to the side. "So what are you gone do?" Reginald slightly tensed up his face and pulled out his Swiss Army knife his dad had given him. "It's your ass
