

Maori aspirations will not find expression by rhetoric alone. If they are to be converted to practice, sound conceptual foundations, clarity of purpose, and a capacity for measuring both progress and impact must underpin them. Nga Kahui Pou examines:- the constitutional implications of self-determination- the application of Maori perspectives to service delivery- frameworks for conceptualising Maori development – in education, health and legislation- the links between Maori endeavours and those of other indigenous peoples. In this authoritative collection of his keynote addresses, Professor Mason Durie discusses Maori initiatives in health, education and Treaty settlements; he considers the shape of a fair national constitution; and he builds on Maori potential and aspirations to develop a vision for Maori futures.
