

“Welcome to Randall House.” With these words, an ordinary young woman is ushered into a strange new world. Yesterday, she was Holly Smith, living a comfortable, middle class life in Southern California. Today, all that has changed. For Holly Smith is actually Holly Randall, born twenty-four years ago to a woman convicted of a heinous crime, and given up for adoption as an infant. Now, the mysterious death of a great aunt she never knew has made Holly one of the richest women in America—and heiress to a magnificent Connecticut estate. In the beautiful mansion above Long Island Sound, they are waiting for her: Uncle John and his imperious wife, robbed of what they believe to be rightfully theirs; the odd, reclusive great uncle, lost in his faded scrapbooks and disturbing memories of dark family secrets; the troubled young woman who roams the estate, murmuring cryptic warnings; the handsome servants’ son to whom Holly is dangerously attracted; and the silent teenage boy who watches Holly’s every move. But who are her friends and who are her enemies?

The Inheritance is a two-part play. The Inheritance has now ended its run at the Young Vic but you can book for the West-End transfer. Stephen Daldry directs this hilarious and profound heart-breaker—a major world premiere in two parts by New York playwright Matthew Lopez. The Inheritance is a vast, imperfect and unweildy masterpiece that unpicks queer politics and neoliberal economics anew.
